Dear Mr. Smith:

Your letter arrived in this morning's mail after my husband was well on his way to New Orleans, where he expects to spend the next few weeks. On his return, he will find your letter awaiting his attention.

Most papers in the country except for the so-called "underground press" boycott any news that could be even remotely construced as favorable to the Garrison investigation. Even the New Orleans papers are chary with their stories.

The Shaw defense has managed to get the case into federal court, which means further delays. The hearings and rulings attendant on that maneuver will probably take some weeks.

My husband will probably write you more fully when he can find the time after his return.

Sincerely,

Lillian Weisberg
